

CHAPTER 10

THE 12TH U.S. CENSUS (1900)

This chapter focuses on the 1900 censuses of Orayvi and Mùnqapi on the 12th Census of the United States, Schedule No. 1 Population, Indian Population. Orayvi (cited here as Oraibi 1900) is on the Moqui Indian Reservation roll (Navajo County, Arizona), and Mùnqapi (Moencopi 1900) on the Western Navajo Reservation roll (Coconino County). Table 10.1 is the census of Orayvi recorded in June 1900, and table 10.2 that of Mùnqapi (which includes a column [incomplete; see chap. 9] of those “taxed citizens,” on the basis of their 1899 allotments). As with the other government censuses, I include an Identifications column, in standard orthography, keyed mostly to Titiev’s census, with a few to White’s genealogies. Beginning with these censuses in 1900, however, I have not included Titiev’s clan identifications, in part to avoid the effect, through serial repetition, of re-affirming designations I am in part seeking to place in question. Titiev’s clan identifications for the individuals on the 1900 and subsequent censuses are most easily located by consulting the alphabetical listing in table 8.1

As noted in chapter 1, my correlation of identifications with names as recorded on these government censuses (as with all others) has followed a conservative methodology. A name that stands in the Identifications column without qualification correlates positively with an identified person with absolute certainty or an extremely high level of probability. A name in that column followed by a question mark correlates with some degree of confidence, but not certainty. A blank or question mark in the Identifications column means I am unable to convincingly correlate the name recorded on the census with an identified person; in some cases, I may have a reasonable idea about the named person, but the level of probability is insufficient to permit even potential identification. For considerations of space, I have not included my reasoning for all specific correlations of identifications that may appear counterintuitive. The general basis for such identifications (as well as for those that are more obviously intuitive) is extensive comparison of names, families, relationships, and ages taken collectively (i.e., never in just one of these categories alone) across all the censuses included herein, as well as with additional government censuses up through the 1930s (see chap. 1), interviews with older Hopis, and with names as reported in the archival record beyond censuses.

Levy (1992: 6) characterized the 1900 census as “the one major source of information that was not available to Titiev”, and depended heavily on it—in correlation with Titiev’s census—for his analysis of Orayvi’s population and social structure. While he acknowledged “some of the males of the ‘Hostile’ faction were not counted”, Levy represented that the 1900 census listed “almost every individual living in the Hopi villages by household” (Levy, 1992: 5–6). Together with Tawakwaptiwa’s information on children in Titiev’s household census (see my remarks in chap. 7 on his unevenness in that regard), the 1900 Orayvi census was the main source for Levy's adduction of lineage ranks (e.g., Levy, 1992: 43) as based on fertility rates of Orayvi mothers and mortality rates of their children. On the 1900 census, those rates were drawn from the columns "mother of how many children" and "number of these children living", even though Levy (1992: 178, n. 8) was explicit that this was "a rather crude measure". There may be no specific reason to question the figures recorded, but the likelihood of their accuracy for Hostile women seems counterintuitive, at least. What is certain, however, is that definitive birth dates assigned in nearby columns, by month and year, are—for all adults and many children—purely speculative, containing some stark errors and quite implausible guesses. Generally speaking, birth years appear based solely on age projections; from comparisons with other censuses, some are more appropriate than others. Birth months, however, were evidently random entries, rather than the result, for example, of questions posed about a person's season of birth. An egregious example, regarding age, is Loololma's older brother Sakwhongiwma, probably born in the 1820's or before, who is given a birth date of May 1870 on the Orayvi census (#687). Some individuals appeared on both the 1900 Orayvi and Mũnqapi censuses, with quite different estimates of month and year of birth, and indeed marital status: Humi (Desert Fox) is listed as single and born in May 1884 on the Orayvi census (#698), but married and born in October 1878 on the 1900 Mũnqapi census (#6). Such discrepancies would suggest we treat figures from adjacent columns (for example, regarding fertility and child mortality rates) with some skepticism.

Given the centrality of Levy's explanation to recent understanding of Orayvi social structure and its split, the 1900 census's relative accuracy is an important question analytically as well as factually. Compared to other censuses, especially those from 1906–1908, the 1900 census shows some deficiencies. Field matron Anna Ritter compiled almost three-fourths of the census, and Herman S. Kampmeier, the Oraibi Day School Principal, the remainder. Kampmeier's familiarity with the Orayvi population was almost certainly negatively impacted by his role in the community (Ritter's probably less so): the Hostiles actively resisted his attempts to round up their children for school, after he arrived in November 1899—six months before the census was conducted (see Whiteley, 1988a: 91–92).

The Orayvi census numbers 786 individuals, 20 of whom were Navajos (presumably living in the broad vicinity). Deducting these 20, of the remaining 766, 16 people (in several households) were recorded twice, leaving an actual total for Orayvi Hopis of 750. The 1900 Mũnqapi census lists 86 people, 17 of whom were also recorded on the Orayvi census. Thus the adjusted Orayvi and Mũnqapi total, i.e., of all Third Mesa Hopis on these two censuses, should be 819. Levy's total count from the 1900 census (Levy, 1992: 6; Cameron, 1999: 75) for both villages was 858, which he favorably compared to one of Titiev's estimates (Titiev, 1944: 52) in 1906 of 863 (although Titiev [1944: 51] also indicated a total, including those whose clans he was unable to identify, of 880). Levy's figure of 858 was based on a mistaken count of 772 (rather than 766) for Orayvi, added to all 86 at Mũnqapi, thus not discounting any duplicates.

Of the 819 total, I am unable to identify 100 individuals (all except two were children): 92 at Orayvi and 8 at Mũnqapi. Numerous individuals born before 1900 and listed as still alive in censuses of 1906, 1908, and/or thereafter, are missing from the 1900 censuses (see table 10.3). Especially given infant mortality rates, it is likely the actual figure was higher than the total of 126 aged seven years and older in 1906 shown on table 10.3. For example, in 1905 Orayvi field matron, Miltona M. Keith (later Staufer), reported: "An unsolved problem is the feeding of poorly nourished and sickly children. A large percentage of the mortality among the Oraibi babies is on account of poor nutrition" (ARCIA, 1905: 166).

Of those missing, 60 were adults over the age of 18 in 1900 (according to my calculations of ages; see chap. 14, tables 14.8–14.10); however, this number does not include any older individuals who may have been missed on the 1900 census but who died before 1906 (Hostiles or Friendly males) or 1908 (Friendly females). Also excluded from my count are any infants or young children not recorded in 1900 who died before these next sets of censuses were taken. Eleven identifications of children in table 10.3 are not found on Titiev's or White's records, but are derived from 1908 or 1906 censuses; none correlate with those on the 1900 censuses (including school censuses; see below). Others of the same category (i.e., not found on Titiev's or White's records; all in this category are listed on tables 14.1 and 14.2) can be equated with individuals in similar family positions on the 1900 census; these too are thus excluded from table 10.3. Only those children seven years of age and older (again, see tables 14.8–14.10) are included in table 10.3; eleven children whose ages I estimate at six years in 1906 are thus excluded, even though some or all may have been born before June 1900. At least 20 individuals were away at boarding schools (Boarding School Censuses, 1900): (1) Phoenix Indian School (17 Hopi students, most or all of whom appear to be from Orayvi or Mũnqapi); (2) Grand Junction Indian Training School (five Hopi students, though how many, if any, were from Third Mesa is not clear to me); (3) Albuquerque Indian School (five Hopi students, at least two of whom appear to be from Third Mesa); and (4) Santa Fe Industrial School (one Hopi student, from Orayvi).

The adjusted total of 819 Hopis on the 1900 Orayvi and Mũnqapi censuses is 30% below the (adjusted) total of 1,067 recorded for Orayvi, Hotvela, and Mũnqapi in 1908 (see chap. 12). There is no reason to assume a precipitous increase in fertility or decrease in infant mortality in the intervening years (or, indeed, any immigration). Based on table 10.3, a reasonable inference is that 150 individuals at minimum were missing from the 12th census of Orayvi and Mũnqapi, or ca. 18% of the probable population total. The 1900 census remains a valuable source, but its value is significantly enhanced (and its errors noticed and/or corrected) when framed in relation to the totality of available census data. Finally, echoing Mayhugh's allotment schedules of eight years earlier, most households on the 1900 census appear to comprise nuclear families.
